Scientific Workshop Overview

Learning English in Algeria has become increasingly significant as the language gains prominence in education, research, and global communication. For many Algerian students, English represents not only a school subject but also a bridge to international knowledge, academic mobility, and professional opportunities. However, mastering English as a Foreign Language (FL) often presents challenges, particularly in developing the four essential skills – listening, speaking, reading, and writing – which are crucial for effective communication and academic success. Therefore, early exposure to interactive, skill-oriented training can play a vital role in helping students gain confidence and competence in their language use.

In this context, a pedagogical training workshop is organized for First-year LMD students majoring in English to support their transition into university studies and build a strong linguistic and academic foundation. The workshop provides a dynamic environment where students can explore practical ways to improve their English proficiency, enhance their communication abilities, and understand the broader relevance of their studies.
